They er, both young men, and Brooks has been married a fittle less than a year, and two days ago his wife bore him a child. One night recently Brocks celebrated this event by getting on a spree, and returning to the fureace he met Leve and the old feud was rekindled. Some hot words were used and a fight ensued. Brooks picked up a heavy piece of ciuder and struck Love on the head, and the fight ended for a time. Live promising to renew hostilities in the morning. When moreing arrived Brooks was informed that Lave had surchased a r. volver, and he too prepared himself with a five shooter and proceeded with his friends to the furnace. There he met Love and a crowd of back re. Both were prepared for battle, and it did no: take look to find sufficient cause. Followed by their respective cliques the two priccipals wa ked along together, eating each other hard names, until Love fically picked up a Brick and threw is at Brook's head. "Give it to him back" yelled one of the crowd, and Love also drew and fired. There were probaby fity men circled around the combatants, each arking his favorite to fire and each armed with a knife or pistel. The principals needed no encouragement, however. Long buried hatred had burst forth in the besom of each, and, freezied with excitement, they fully determined to settle the matter then and there. > man who was covered with severe bruises was sent the Chambers street Hospital. The manner in which he received his injuries is extraordina ry. He was in his room at half past ten o'clock at night. He was in a fit of delirium, and imsgined that he heard a woman calling to him to come to her sid. He did not hesitate a moment to enter the chimney, but promptly plunged in from the top, and with encouraging should slid down as far as he could go. Between the first and second floors he became firmly wedged in between the walls of the chimney, unable to move back r forth, and with the alternative of death by suffication or by a slow process of roseting It was now his turn to shout, and this he did to such good purpose that he was heard in the adjoining tenements. The astorished tenants ficked to the rooms on the first and second flors of the house, whence could be heard the grosss of the imprisoned man, but it was not easy to suggest a way of liberating him. Several policemen soon arrived. After a brief conference it was decided that to set him free the chimney n ust be broken down, as he might properly edject to being grappled from behind and pulled up on the roof even if this could be done. Accordingly the officers and others wint to work and broke down the chimney on the first and second floors of the house. It had to be done carefully, though - ith all speed, and i was several hours before the unfortunate man was at last dragged from his place of imprisonment and laid upon the floor. He was found to be covered with bruises received in his struggles, but was apparently not daugerously injured. The delirium had to a great extent left him —
